Established 1968

Established in 1968, Sun Construction has held a significant presence in the Town of Conception Bay South for five decades. This family-run business, founded by husband and wife duo Richard and Carrie Gosse, with daughter Kerry overseeing office operations, has played a key role in shaping the local landscape.

During its early years, Sun Construction undertook diverse projects throughout Newfoundland and Labrador, ranging from heavy road construction and electrical transmission line work to water and sewer projects, as well as residential construction. The Gosse family also managed several other business ventures within the community, showcasing their entrepreneurial spirit.

Sun Construction has constructed various key bridges across the town including Dunns Hill Road bridge, Fowlers Road bridge, and another in Kelligrews. With an impressive portfolio that includes the construction of nearly 500 homes in Conception bay South, along with substantial water and sewer projects, Sun Construction has significantly contributed to the Town's residential terrain and infrastructure.

Sun Construction remains under the leadership of its original founders. In recent years, the business has strategically shifted its focus to home development. Richard Gosse, a familiar face on worksites to this day, continues to uphold the company's standards, ensuring that each project reflects the quality workmanship on which Sun Construction has built its reputation.
